Delay in Acquiring Competing Routes Costly to New Haven, He Says.

AID OFFERED TO GET POUGHKEEPSIE LINE

Chester W. Chapin Testifies to His Hard Time in Operating Central of New England.

The government attorneys again called to their aid yesterday the apparently inexhaustible memory of Charles S. Mellen to help them fit the line big and little facts of New England railroad history into place in building up their case against the eleven former New Haven directors on trial on a charge of conspiring to violate the Sherman anti-trust law.

There was little direct testimony yesterday by Mr. Mellen. Most of his time on the stand was taken up by the reading of letters and documents, but he was always ready, when needed, to illuminate the meaning of somewhat obscure records of the past. They had to do principally with the New Haven's dickering to get control of the Central of New England Railroad, which is the standard of the Sabbath. to do principally ven's dickering to get control of the Central of New England Railroad, which held the strategically valuable Poughkeepsie Bridge route.

While he was second vice-president of the New Haven he had, the docuof the New Haven he had, the docu-ments showed, vigorously favored the acquisition of that route. Then he went West as president of the North-ern Pacific, but the time came when the New Haven again took up the matter of obtaining the Poughkeepsie Bridge route, and the letters showed Presi-dent John M. Hall, of the New Haven, reaching out to Mr. Mellen in the Far West for advice.

Advised to Buy Early.

Mellen replied on May 30, 1900:
"The New Haven has always been prone to underestimate the importance of a competitor, and as a result of delay in many instances has paid a tre-mendous price when with a little effort the competition could have been stopped in its inception and with very tle expenditure.
"The road has been extremely fortu-

Central of New England, told of his purchase of the property as an investment, his attempt to operate it and his fights with the New Haven, which made his lot a hard one, and his final sale of the road to the New Haven at a moderate profit.

"When I took the line." he said, "I value of the 1914 crop.
